West Virginia School-Based Health Center Initiative

In 1994, the West Virginia Bureau for Public Health and the Claude Worthington Benedum Foundation funded a 3-year pilot project to develop school-based health centers in West Virginia. The goal of the initiative was to ensure primary and preventive care for youth by eliminating access barriers that children and adolescents face. The initiative is also linked with the West Virginia Department of Education's Healthy Schools Program that includes school health services, and specifically the development of school-based health centers, as one of its eight core areas.

After seventeen years as a statewide initiative, it is widely accepted that school-based health centers provide easily accessible and cost-effective care, and are strongly supported by students, parents, and school staff. As of the fall of 2011, there are 65 school-based health centers serving 78 schools in 27 counties, making health services available to a school-aged population of over 42,000 children.

School-based health centers (SBHCs) are health clinics that bring preventive and immediate care, as well as counseling, health education, and sometimes dental care, to children and adolescents where they are much of the day – at school.

Initial State and Benedum funding allowed for the development of health centers at selected sites and a school health technical assistance center at Marshall University, which assists new and existing centers on various operational issues and program development. As the number of school-based health centers increases, the state-funded model has been adopted by other organizations, particularly local hospitals.

School health services take many forms in West Virginia. So once again this year, the directory includes other types of school-based health and mental health programs. It is not a complete listing, but we hope it will be a useful resource for communities and providers. The SBHCs are ordered by county, and information includes the sponsoring agency, contact information, schools and grades served, total student enrollment as of October 2011, and hours of operation. Also listed, following the SBHCs by county, are mobile medical clinics & community-based programs providing school health services. Also included are a description of the Marshall University School Health Technical Assistance Center, a list of useful websites and contact persons. Appendix A is a list of school nurses with phone numbers by county. Appendix B is contact information for school-based behavioral health programs that are currently funded by the WV Bureau for Behavioral Health Children's Division.
